The UMLC continues to meet annually to address concerns in public and private school music education programs in urban areas. Participants still find great value in the sharing of successes and challenges through formal presentations, informal conversation, and workshops. Throughout the time of a typical conference, there are opportunities for participants to gather in small groups to share experiences, plans, ideas and have collegial exchanges with professionals of similar focus.

Topics such as NCLB, Standards in the Arts, Assessment, Advocacy, Professional Development and Recruiting and Retaining of Music Educators are addressed at the annual conference among other topics of vital importance to urban music education. Presenters at the conference are distinguished leaders in the arts community including MENC presidents, university faculty, music corporation executives, state level education administrators, arts organization directors and performers. The experience and expertise of these presenters contributes to the success of the UMLC. Additionally, each conference, like that very first in Chicago, includes visits to schools of the host district.
